

He can't speak yet, but he already has lots to say that may improve the lives of millions of children

Your participation in the National Children's Study can provide valuable information about children's health and development

The National Children's Study is the largest long-term study in the United States aimed at expanding what we know about children's health. We need to learn more about how the environment and genetics affect children's health, development, and quality of life.

Thousands of moms, dads, and children will participate in this important Study. We will look at many aspects of children's lives from before birth to age 21, such as family history, and where they live, learn, and play. The Study doesn't involve any medications or treatments.

If you or someone you know may become pregnant in the next few years, and are interested in helping improve the lives of children for generations to come, please contact the Los Angeles-Ventura Study Center toll-free at 1-877-834-7064 to learn more.

Visit <http://www.NationalChildrensStudy.gov> to learn more

